English

Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow.

A true friend is one who supports us in a crisis. He fulfills both material and spiritual needs. He can understand not only our words but our silence too. A mountain appears more clear when one is on the plain, at same distance away. In a similar manner we can appreciate the value of a friend even more in his absence. A fisherman casts his net into the water as he hopes to catch fish.But we do not make friends with the hope that we will gain something.

We should share not only joys but also troubles with our friends. We feel relaxed and refreshed in the company of a friend. He is like a morning dew. A friend is a true treasure.

A friend is like a board which gives support. He is like the fireside which keeps us warm in winter. We need not be afraid to speak freely in his presence. We can express our innermost feelings, hopes and fears. He is sure to understand and sympathize with us. True friendship is enjoyed and celebrated for its own sake. There are no ulterior motives or expectations among friends.We count on friends when our life is at an ebb. We should be equally ready to share with them the flood of joy in our life.
